Millet has been an integral part of our diet for centuries. India is the top producer of millets in the world and the fifth-largest exporter of millets, millets aid in the prevention of numerous non-communication lifestyle diseases, such as diabetes, hypertension and cardiovascular disease and etc. it is considered to be potential choice to address the problem of malnutrition and to consequently improve the food and nutrition security of the nation.

In addition to a plethora of health benefit, millets are also good for the environment with low water & input requirement and carbon footprints. Due to their adaptability to a wide range of temperatures and moisture regimes millets are resistant to climate change. With the aim to create awareness and increase production and consumption of millets the college of K.S.R College of arts and science for women proposes to host "National Conference - In Commemoration of International Year of Millets".

Textiles - Textile production and clothing were necessities of life in prehistory. Textiles that are raw and unfinished are referred to as greige goods. After manufacturing, the materials are processed and finished. The textile industry grew out of art and craft and was kept going by guilds. In the 18th and 19th centuries, during the industrial revolution, it became increasingly mechanized. The speed and scale of textile production have been altered almost beyond recognition by industrialization and the introduction of modern manufacturing techniques. In the 20th century, science and technology were driving forces. Textiles produced for industrial purposes, and designed and chosen for technical characteristics beyond their appearance, are commonly referred to as technical textiles.
